2,000 COMPETE IN BROAD JUMP

By WILLIAM C. RICHARDS

Those in whose hands is the Country's future in improve or degenerate await Belle Isle Friday. Thirty-two thousand boys and girls, scattered until dusk, their strength and skill the spokesman and courage in the eighteenth and largest track and field meet held thus far for school children of Metropolitan Detroit, under the sponsorship of The Detroit Free Press. More than 20,000 other—children and adults—crowded the sidewalks.

Such a scene evokes the importance of words. The spectacle is beyond exact description. There was no looked, youth was different from what one looks for youth to be. They were all bound somewhere, flying on their own, chin set, feet lifted to a crossbar.

100 in 50-Yard Dash
Two thousand thronged down into the sands of the broad jump pits alone. There were nine to a squad, and each squad was rushed through in four minutes. A thousand boys hurried down the line in the sand and jumped lines necessary to run off the 50-yard dash, or as courage of about seven a minute.

The contestants are as indescribable as the race they set. One looked in vain for some quiet one—some adolescent philosopher who could take all this or have it done. But they were all one in the overwhelming urge to run at a hand's outstretched or push a shot out or run with variable maddness, teeth set and arms awing, over the island grass.

They came in short and tall size, red-headed and freckled, a son of a bank director in the same
