Young Athlete Doesn't Feel Handicapped

MIAMI (AP) — "My head-stopped?" asks Raymond Flores, a 16-year-old who would just as soon play baseball without his artificial leg as with it.

"I can run pretty fast," he says, then demonstrates by "running" on one leg to first base and sliding into second. He also pitches for the team.

"I like baseball the best," he says.

When Raymond was an infant, doctors amputated his right leg to save his life. He was born with a tumor above the knee.

Raymond was walking with the help of a wooden ski pantyhose he was about 18 months old. And at about 6, he was fitted with a more sophisticated artificial limb.

He usually wears the artificial limb all day, except for swimming and riding his bicycle. But the limb bothers him sometimes, such as on the day of the Cub Scout picnic.

"So he went without it to play baseball," says his mother, Magaly Flores. "He hops just as well. He doesn't care, whatever way he can get from the fastest.

"He's amazing. Any place we go, anywhere we are, he's just like the other boys."

She says Erling Raymond's artificial leg "is like getting new shoes. At first it is a little long, by the end of the year, it is a little short."

Mrs. Flores says she's proud that her son gets an A in physical education and is particularly interested in science. But she says she is also proud of Raymond for another reason.

"He's happy. As happy as anybody with two legs and two arms. I've really been lucky."

Possible Strike Faced by NBPA

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — The National Basketball Players Association could soon face a strike, since its players do not receive what they will ask the management, a trainer said Monday at the NBPA convention.

Trainer Bill Base of the Milwaukee Bucks said, "The players will decide the strategy on how to respond to demands of the management."

Base said that the players have formed a united front to face management.

He explained that the management have all the right to offer fewer advantages to the players, but stressed that the players also have a right to make their choice.

"A strike would be bad for everybody, the management, the players and the crowds. The players and the management would lose money, and the fans would not have the games to see. But I can assure you that that group is willing to fight for their rights until the very end," Base said.

Base said the management is interested in merging the NBPA with the American Basketball Association.

"That's the worst thing that could happen to the players. In a merger, it one party offers you a certain amount of money, you have no other choice but to accept it, Base said.

Jim Barnett of the New York Knicks said this time the management would have to give in a little more.

"We will fight for pension, per diem, medical care, dental insurances and other advantages," Barnett said.

Barnett said he only hopes the management accept to pay them at least in accordance with the inflation, spiral.

More than 200 professional players are in Brazil taking part in the annual convention.
